MarieForleo.com Chapter 1The Orange Tropicana My mother has the tenacity of a bulldog, looks like June Cleaver, and curses like a truck driver. The daughter of two alcoholic parents grew up in New-ark, New Jersey projects. She learned, by necessity, how to stretch aof dollar around the apple and is of the most resourceful and industrious people you could ever meet. She once told me she rarely felt valued, loved, or beautiful, but she held tight to the promise she made to herself that, once she was old enough, sheeAAAd find a way to a better life. As a kid, I remember going through the Sunday paper together and cutting coupons. She taught me all the different ways to save money. She also taught me to pay close attention to the free stuff that brands would send youeAAAlke recipe books or cooking utensilsAAAlf you saved up and mailed in a eAAAprroof of purchase.eAAA One of my momeAAAs most prized possessions was a little transistor radio she got from juice, for free. The radio was the size, color, and shape of an orange, with a red-and-white-striped antenna sticking out the side like a straw. She loved that little radio. My mom is one of those people who is constantly busy. As a little girl, I knew I could find her somewhere around the house or yard by listening for the tiny sound coming out of that Tropicana orange. One day I was walking home from school and heard the radio playing off in the distance. As I got closer, I realized the music was coming from above. I looked up and saw my mom perched on the roof of our two-story house. eAAAMooooom! Is everything okay? What are you doing all the way up there?eAAA She yelled down, eAAAtcAAAM fine, Ree. The roof had a leak. When I called the roofer, he said it would be at least five hundred bucks, probably more. ThateAAAs friggineAAAs nuts! I remembered seeing some extra asphalt in the garage and figured it would just take a few minutes to fix it up.eAAA Another time, I came home from school and heard the radio buzzing from the back of the house. Mom was in the bathroom, surrounded by tools and exposed pipes. Dust particles filled the air. eAAAMom, whateAAAs going on?eAAA eAAAOh, leAAAM just retelling the bathroom,eAAA she said. eAAAI saw a few cracks and didnAAAt want it all to get YoueAAAAve got to understand, my mom is high school educated and this was the 1980s. It was a pre-internet, pre-YouTube, pre-Google world. I never knew where leAAAd find her or what sheeAAAd be doing, but all I had to do was follow the crackle of that radio. One fall day, I came home late from school and something was difAAAtferent. Everything was dark. There was an unusual silence. Something was wrong. I quietly walked through the house afraid of what I might find. Where was the sound of the Tropicana orange? Where was my mom? Then I heard clicks and clacks. I followed that sound and saw my mom huddled over the kitchen table. It looked like an operating room. I saw electrical tape and screwdrivers, and spread out in front of her were countless tiny pieces of a dismantled Tropicana orange radio. eAAAMom, are you okay? What happened to your radio? Is it broken?eAAA eAAAlteAAAs fine, Ree. No big deal. The antenna got busted and the tuner dial was a little off, so leAAAM fixing it. eAAA I stood there for a second, watching her work her magic. Finally, I asked, eAAAHey, Mom, how do you know how to do so many different things that youeAAAAve never done before, without anyone showing you how to do it?eAAA She put down her screwdriver, turned to me, and said, eAAADoneAAAt be silly, Ree. Nothing in life is that complicated. You can do whatever you set your mind to if you just roll up your sleeves, get in there, and do it. EvAAerything is figureoutable.eAAA I was transfixed, reveling in and repeating those words in my head: Everything is figureoutable. Everything is figureoutable.
